

JESSICA BROWN

storyteller, arts worker and educator

Jessica Brown is a storyteller, arts worker and educator who delights in the connective and transformative quality of art. She is passionate about creative community projects that invite collaboration, deep reflection, and positive change and it is this belief and passion that makes Jessica the driving force and heart behind The Little Pocket Association and the Regeneration - Creative Bushfire Recovery Project.

Jessica's experience weaves across the creative, community, health, and education sector. Over the last 20 years she has worn many hats...the performing artist, the visual artist, the director of theatre, the speech and drama teacher, the arts worker, the arts administrator, the early childhood and primary school teacher, the workshop facilitator, the community cultural development officer and the project manager. It's a good thing she loves hats.
